++ Valid for broadcast between 0600 and 1800

Headline:
Turning warmer next week.

Today:
A fairly cloudy but mostly day across much of the UK, though some bright or sunny intervals may develop at times for some. Brighter across southern UK though with some good spells of warm sunshine.

Tonight:
Variable, and at times large, amounts of cloud across the UK. Dry for most, but a few showers are possible over Northern Ireland and western Scotland. Milder than last night.

Sunday:
Spells of rain, heavy at times will develop over Northern Ireland and much of Scotland during the afternoon. Elsewhere, brighter and generally dry with warm bright or sunny spells.

Outlook for Monday to Wednesday:
Widely fine with sunny spells. Largely dry following overnight rain for some early Monday, although further showers probably arriving into the southwest later Wednesday. Becoming widely very warm, locally hot.
